Down on the farm, there are noises all around. The cry of a crow. The bark of a hound.

But Rodney the rooster sits quietly by. He opens his beak and tries to be loud. He gargles...he gurgles...but Rodney the rooster can't find his sound.

Hmmm, where could it be?

Chris the cow moos.

Rodney opens his beak and lets out
a “Moo!”

But that’s not his sound.

Penny the pig oinks.

Rodney opens his beak and lets out
an “Oink!”

But that’s not his sound.

Henry the horse neighs.

Rodney opens his beak and lets out
a “Neigh!”

But that’s not his sound.

Sam the sheep baas.

Rodney opens his beak and lets out
a “Baa!”

But that's not his sound.

Daisy the duck quacks.

Rodney opens his beak and lets out
a “Quack!”

But that’s not his sound.

Soon, it's bed time and Rodney is worried. Maybe he will never find his sound?

But, as the sun comes up, Rodney awakes to a noise he has never heard before.

“Cock-a-doodle-doo!”

And Rodney has found his sound.

About The Author

Mairead Davis and Nathan Brierley both work as economists at Deloitte Access Economics in Brisbane, Queensland. When not listening to country music (Mairead) or crunching numbers (Nathan), they like to escape the city and love reading. A love for reading should be shared by all and their involvement with this wonderful cause is their small contribution to this goal.
